

DROUTH ENDS CROP CONTROL

Political Chamber of Horrors or A Candidate Gets the Jitters

Editorial by Alex. H. Washburn

Every candidate for governor who has nothing better to talk about attacks the "horrible conditions" at the State Hospital for Nervous Diseases.

Speaking in Hope Tuesday night Howard Reed's daughter made three charges:

1. Governor Futrell enforced his economy program by abolishing the asylum's baseball team.
2. Governor Futrell took away another of the asylum's innocent amusements—free motion pictures.
3. One of the governor's state workers at the asylum took from relatives of a Kingsland patient who had died $109 to prepare the body for burial—and then delivered the body to said relatives in a naked condition.

Here is a typical Reed campaign charge. Let's examine it.

X X X

Dr. A. C. Kolb, of Hope, is a member of the board of the State Hospital.

Dr. Kolb told The Star Friday that the hospital baseball team which was abolished, was composed largely of hired players that cost the state $1,500 a year plus board and room—an average of more than $300 a month during the playing season. Another reason for the abolishment was that the hired players brought many hangers-on to the hospital grounds where they had no business. Furthermore, inmates of the asylum today receive free passes to all games of the Little Rock Club of the Southern Association; and teams of the Little Rock City League play daily on the asylum grounds. So the asylum still has plenty of baseball amusement.

Regarding the movies, Dr. Kolb tells this newspaper that they were NOT abolished. They were discontinued temporarily while CWA construction was under way at the hospital, and were then restored. There were free movies right up to June 1st this year, when they were discontinued for the summer season, as is the regular custom at the asylum, because there are no cooling facilities for indoor audiences during the hot months.

Out of little incidents like these do grave campaign charges grow.

X X X

Now regarding the alleged incident of a Kingsland family sending money to the hospital to prepare a deceased patient for burial.

J. H. Parker, the hospital's business manager, makes this flat statement:

"When money is sent here for burial purposes the hospital never in any way handles it but requests that the money be paid to the undertaker who has charge of the funeral."

Candidate Reed may have a case against some undertaker, and he may cause the State Hospital itself to proceed against some undertaker—but has he a case against the Futrell administration?

Following Miss Reed's charge before a Hope audience Tuesday night Board Member Kolb immediately wrote Business Manager Parker of the hospital. This is Parker's reply:

I have your letter of August 8, also the Hope Star with reference to some charges made about the hospital about the way a patient was delivered to his people after death. We have searched our records and are unable to find any patient that has been shipped to Kingsland since I have been connected with the hospital. Kingsland, as you know, is in Cleveland County and we have also looked for patients that might have been shipped to other points. Dora Adams, who died on September 18, 1933, from Rison, was removed by Drummond and Company, City. Emy Prazier, colored, died on October 11, 1933, from Rison, and her remains were removed by T. K. Miller and Company, Pine Bluff, Arkansas. We have no way to determine just what the Reed crowd are charging to us in this respect.

It has been the custom when a patient dies to make a robe for them out of sheets and has always been done according to our records. Where a patient is delivered to an undertaker they are robed as stated above. All the caskets used now, or formerly used, by this institution are plain wooden caskets made in our shops here. When the bodies are delivered to undertakers we very seldom give them a casket unless they are financially unable to buy another casket. If Howard Reed would give us the name of the patient I would be glad to make a thorough investigation and furnish you with the information obtainable.

I have had a talk with the employees and they tell me that charges of this kind are no exception to the rule when there is a campaign on for Governor.

Dr. Arkebauer has handled the burial of these patients for a long number of years and he told me this morning that when money is sent here for burial purposes the hospital never in any way handles it but requests that the money be paid to the undertaker who has charge of the funeral. I can find no case where this hospital has received money for burial purposes. I am sure there is absolutely no truth in that statement. If Howard Reed wants to make any charges against the hospital I believe he ought to be willing to state exactly what he has in mind so that we could answer it if we want to.

Your very sincerely,

J. H. PARKER,
Business Manager.

Slight Hope for Relief From Heat Wave in Arkansas

3-Inch Rain Rakes Glenwood, Damaging Much Property

ASHDOWN ALSO HIT

But Elsewhere State Suffers From Intense August Heat

LITTLE ROCK.—(P)—Some sections of the state enjoyed somewhat cooler weather Friday but discovered heavy damage left by high winds and rain. Other sections continued to swelter in 100-plus temperatures as little hope was held out for a break in the torrid conditions. (Maximum in Hope up to 3 p.m. Friday was 100 degrees.)

Two persons were injured when a school was blown down near Ashdown.

Three inches of rain fell at Glenwood, Marshall, Batesville and Pochahontas were other points which reported rain.

By the Associated Press

The heat wave held on tenaciously Friday with a steadily-mounting toll of victims.

Thirty-six persons are known to have perished during the past few days as a result of record-breaking temperatures, and no relief is in sight yet, weather Bureau officials said.

The cool wave reported to be sweeping out of the Northwest failed to make its appearance and temperatures sky-rocketed Thursday far beyond the century mark in many places for the second scorching day.

Texas had 15 deaths. Nebraska counted seven.

The Rocky Mountain region cooled off and four persons perished near Denver in a terrific rain and hail storm.

By the Associated Press

Scores of prostrations and at least seven deaths were recorded Thursday as the Midwest and Southwest were tortured by a heat wave soon to be dissipated, weather officials said, by cooling winds from the North.

Meanwhile Colorado suffered a terrific hail and rainstorm in the resort region near Denver that lashed the mountain streams into a frenzy and swept four persons to their deaths.

Hottest spot of the nation was Nowata, Okla., with a reading of 114 degrees. Close behind were Missouri and Kansas. It was 113 in Marysville, Mo., 110 in Kansas City, 107 in Jefferson City, Mo., and other Kansas localities suffered.

Two deaths were reported in Illinois and Springfield, where the state Republican convention convened, saw its all-time heat record fall with a new reading of 108.

Temperatures shot up late Thursday in Milwaukee to 97 and two persons died. One person died in Kansas City.

New Arkansas Record
Arkansas had another record of record breaking heat with 109 at Fort Smith, and all-time record, and 110 at Harrison, equaling the high mark for that city. One death occurred in the state.

Rains accompanied the cool wave at Sioux Falls, Yankton, Mitchell, Brookings and Watertown, S. D. Temperatures ranged from 55 degrees at Aberdeen to 62 at Pierre. Almost an inch of rain fell at Watertown.

High humidity added to the discomforts of the 94-degree heat at Chicago, but toward mid-afternoon the temperature dropped to 91 and occasional breezes gave relief.

Des Moines, Ia., had a reading of 102 degrees. When the thermometer

Form---and Reform---in Films

Before and after movie reform might be the label for these two poses of Ida Lupino, bewitching ornament to the film industry. At the left, in a photo broadcast by her studio just before the storm broke, Ida is alluring in a yachting costume that is charmingly revealing. But how times have changed! At the right, you see Ida today, all dressed up in her non-exposure garb, going in for wholesome exercise.

Prison Gates Are Opened by Hitler

He Even Turns Loose Men Who Made "Insulting Remarks"

BERLIN, Germany.—(P)—Chancellor Adolf Hitler opened the doors of jails and concentration camps for thousands of political prisoners Thursday, extending amnesty to those convicted of minor offenses. The order was issued as a commemoration of the union of the presidency and the chancellorship. The exact number affected remains to be determined.

The move was looked upon as a first step in Hitler's campaign for a fresh vote of confidence in the national plebiscite August 19.

The new law was said by observers to have the following political aims:

(2) Direct indication to foreign countries that the plebiscite is not to be carried out under threat of political imprisonment.

(3) To make a bid for "gratitude" votes which will help swell the Nazi balloting.

Even gratitude votes may play an important part in the final count, it was said, since Hitler must better his 93 per cent of the public approval recorded in the November, 1933, plebiscite, in order to gain definite and satisfactory evidence of national support.

The amnesty applies without regard to the offense to persons fined up to 1,000 marks or imprisoned for periods up to six months, provided they have no previous criminal record.

Even those previously convicted will be freed if sentences were not more than 500 marks fine or three months in prison.

Only those convicted prior to August 2, date of President von Hindenburg's death, are to benefit from the law.

The political offenses to which the amnesty applies include those guilty of making insulting remarks about Hitler.

Babe Ruth Will Quit as Regular

"Curtain" for the Most-Famed Figure in American Game

BOSTON, Mass.—Babe Ruth Friday set aside all conjecture about his immediate future with this statement: "I'm definitely through as a regular player at the end of the season."

He made this statement to newspapermen as he sat in an hotel room before Friday's game between the New York Yankees and the Boston Red Sox.

"I would like to remain in the game as manager and perhaps do a little pinch-hitting on Saturdays and Sundays," he said.

"I would like to wind up this season, too, by playing on the championship Yankee club and getting into the World Series."

Republicans Sound Call in Illinois

"Party of Sound Policies" Is Slogan of G. O. P. Roundup

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—(P)—Republican National Chairman Henry P. Fletcher Thursday asked voters for the "party of sound economic practices."

Fletcher was one of the 20 speakers before the Republican state convention held on the hottest day in Springfield's history, the weather bureau recording 108 degrees.

In starting the Midwestern drive against the Democrats, Fletcher charged that Democratic campaign promises have been violated, that the NRA and AAA have failed and that unprecedented expenditures in the name of recovery have failed to produce results.

Platform recommendations condemned the policies of the ruling Democrats but made no attack upon the president.

"The New Deal's NRA is strangling its AAA," said Fletcher.

He said the Democrats might require every farmer to paint a black crow on his gate post as a condition to getting government money.

He asked why money should be spent "to prime the pump" if there is no indication it will operate on its own.

"In the Good Old Summer Time," was sung spontaneously by the delegates as interlude to the proceedings.

"The credit of the United States can only be undermined by the government itself indulging in unsound financial policies and unchecked extravagances," Fletcher said. We are entitled to know what our government is doing with our money and our credit."

Mrs. Antonio Is Executed in N. Y.

Wife and 2 Men Electrocutated for Murder of Husband

OSSINING, N. Y.—(P)—Mrs. Anna Antonio, a slim 29-year-old mother sat down to death in Sing Sing's electric chair Thursday night with a final word to the warden of her love for her three children.

She also protested her innocence of the $5,000 insurance murder of her husband, for which the state exacted in the same death chamber the lives of two male confederates. They died 13 minutes after Mrs. Antonio.

To Warden Lewis E. Lawes, Mrs. Antonio said in her last hour: "I don't care what you do with me. I'm not afraid to die. I have nothing on my conscience. I never killed anyone."

One of the two men, Vincent Saetta, 24, and Samuel Ferrack, 43, which she did not say—told her before the slaying. Mrs. Antonio acknowledged that he was going to kill her husband.

To this man she quoted herself as saying, "I don't care what you do. I'm only interested in my children."

Pale and wan her weight reduced 15 pounds since she entered the prison's death house 15 months ago, Mrs. Antonio was supported by two matrons as she was brought to the death chair.

She wore a light blue gingham dress and her lips were drawn.

In a low tone that was a mumble to the nearest witness, Mrs. Antonio repeated prayers after the chaplain, the Rev. Father John P. McCafferty.

The matrons, both visibly nervous, were on each side of the chair as she was strapped down to die.

The executioner, Robert Elliott, who threw the witch at the electrocution of Ruth Snyder and Sacco and Vanzetti, again was the grim executioner. The electric current was applied almost immediately with the complete adjustment of the mask and straps.

Her head had been shaved for the electrocution, which was a part of the face mask. Physicians determined at 10:17 p. m. that Mrs. Antonio was dead.

Expressing a conviction that each of the three was guilty, Governor Lehman said the law makes no distinction of sex in the punishment of crimes.

"The crime and the manner of the execution are abhorrent," the governor said.

GRAIN PRICES RISE

Chicago Corn Rushes Upward to Highest Level Since 1930

Abandon '35 Reduction

WASHINGTON.—(P)—The Agricultural Adjustment Administration's far-reaching program of crop-reduction is expected to be abandoned partially next year.

An announcement to this effect awaited the result of the July report of the condition of the nation's crop, due Friday.

The change in plans would be only temporary.

Four factors prompt the AAA to consider lifting the acreage program:

1. Short supplies will cut last year's carry-over to about normal.
2. Officials appreciate the possibility that political opposition might grow if reductions are continued in the face of lower supplies and high prices.
3. Another drouth year would require the use of all acres to maintain supplies at normal.
4. Damage to next year's wheat crop is already predicted on account of the delay in plowing dusty lands.

Your Health

By DR. MORRIS FISHER
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

Ask your doctor what four bad habits are most commonly developed in infancy, and he'll probably reply: "Finger-sucking, nail biting, dirt eating and wetting."

Little children will suck their fingers and thumbs, sometimes the clothing or blankets, in fact, anything that they can get their lips on. Such habits begin quite early in infancy and if not broken early, may last until the child is six or seven years old.

In most instances the sucking of fingers is not an exceedingly serious performance, but in some instances it may influence the shape of the fingers or the mouth. It is also bad because it will aggravate disturbances of indigestion and help to induce infection in the mouth.

Parents and nurses are inclined to overlook the habit because it keeps the child quiet. But you should develop other means of keeping your child quiet, which are safer and less likely to lead into wrong mental attitudes.

Very seldom is the constant sucking of the finger due to hunger. But if your child is hungry, it may suck its fingers, whereas otherwise it would not.

There are many different ways of controlling finger sucking, from the simple means of putting small pasteboard plints on the elbow, to preventing the child from bending its arms, and fastening the hands to the sides during sleep, to such methods as the wearing of mittens, the winding of adhesive plaster around the fingers, the application of bitter-tasting substances, and the use of all sorts of preventive devices.

Most important is plenty of attention on your part to the correction of the difficulty. Reiteration of the warning and constant removal of the fingers will in most cases bring about some result.

Nail-biting and dirt eating are bad habits which usually develop in children that are excessively nervous or whose general health is less than normal. Children with such tendencies must also be controlled by watching and by every effort to break up the habit as early as possible.

Most children can be stopped from wetting the bed at the age of two and one-half years, some much earlier, and a few not until they are after three years of age. After three, regular wetting of the bed is an abnormal performance and should be controlled. To prevent this habit, give the child plenty of milk and water early in the day, but no fluids after four o'clock in the afternoon. At 10 o'clock pick up the child and give it an opportunity to empty the bladder.

Here again, mental attention is exceedingly important. Everything possible should be done to make the child interested and cooperative. In this, rewards are more effective than punishment.

The interest of the child can be gained by marking on a calendar the days on which it is rewarded for being successful. It is, of course, important that every physical defect that is noted be properly controlled.

YOUR CHILDREN

By Olive Roberts Barton

Appetite is caused by the stomach contracting in a sort of rhythmic called peristalsis. The involuntary muscles of the outer walls of this alimentary bag begin to contract and begin to pump food into the stomach.

The thought of food, just as saliva flows into the mouth when a person is hungry, if there is no peristalsis there is no appetite.

But often at meal time there is no message for the stomach, for the very good reason that it is already busy. There is something else in the body to work on. It needs nothing more at the moment and there is no urge to eat.

The owner sits down to a tempting feast, perhaps served in lovely style, consisting of his favorite dishes, but he waits in vain for that beautiful urge to devour. He just isn't hungry.

Just a Glass of Milk. He thinks he's sick. No, he feels fine, but he just doesn't want food. Strange! He ate his breakfast with gusto. And he never had another thing except that at 5:30 he was a bit thirsty and he stopped at a stand for a simple glass of milk.

After an almost untouched dinner he goes and gets some digestive tablets and his stomach laughs itself to death. Two hours later he is ravenous. "These are fine tablets," he thinks. Out he goes to a restaurant he goes and orders onions and steak.

If he knew the truth it would be about the milk. Not that it wasn't a very good thing. But not at the moment. He drank it only an hour before his dinner and milk is a deliberate and slow digester. It has to turn into soft curd and this takes time. The stomach, being busy, doesn't send up its message to the palate as usual for more food. When it was through with its little job on that one glass of milk it was quite ready for its real and customary fodder. The tablets were not needed.

Children the Same. And so with children. Many do not eat enough at meal time to keep them happy until the next meal. They are given a little snack of something to help them hold out, especially when there is a long wait. This "something" is as often as not a glass of milk, an hour or an hour and a half before meal.

What happens is exactly the same as to our gentleman friend. And the mother wonders if Johnny is taking down sick.

Give him milk by all means, but in time for the stomach to be ready to receive new food. If near meal time a little fruit juice or fruit will clear out more quickly. Milk with a meal is all right.

Ice cream probably does the same thing. Added to the milk or the cream is the sugar, and sweets before a meal put an end to appetite. But don't think that children don't need sugar. Except in a very few cases they do. They burn it up in energy.

grows attached to it she isn't allowed to keep it.

But through it all she retains the ability to be happy. It's not, I hasten to add, a sugar-and-water Pollyanna happiness; it is, rather, a sort of serenity, which arises from some profound inner harmony with the main-springs of life itself and therefore cannot be hurt by adverse circumstances.

This all makes an unusual and intelligent sort of novel. The plot wanders way around Robin Hood's barn, toward the end, but for all that the book is one of the bright spots on the summer fiction list.

Published by Scribner's, it sells at $2.50.

Just the Echo of an Old Refrain

BEACH CLUB GIRL

BEGIN HERE TODAY
BOOTS RAEBURN, 18 and pretty, belongs to the younger set at Larchmont, fashionable New York suburb. The Raeburns have had financial reverses and Boots tries not to be let down at her wealthy friends.
SYLVIA RIVERS, richest girl in town, is visiting in party at the Beach Club and Boots is heartbroken because she is not invited. She accepts a momentary invitation to a dinner to be given at the club the same night as Sylvia's party by MISS WATERMAN, wife of Larchmont's noted architect. Boots and Sylvia, who are both young, meet DENNIS PENWAY, Mrs. Hart's cousin.
NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
CHAPTER II
"I MUST be running along," Boots told young Mrs. Hart, rather uncomfortably. She had been an idiot, she reminded herself, to come hitting in here. Lois would think her a fool and this cool, utterly superior young man, with his foreign air of dandified elegance, rather bothered her.
"Nonsense, my dear," Lois seized her arm and made her sit down again. "Dennis is staying with us—oh, you didn't know, you and child, you haven't been to see me in weeks. Boots," she said affectionately and rather gushingly, "was just graduated from high school some weeks ago—with honors. And we are proud of her!"
Boots flushed, feeling more than a little foolish. She must have emphasized the fact that she was just out of school? She wanted to appear a woman of the world, wanted to escape from the tight shell of youthful embarrassments and inhibitions which cramped her. The young man smiled coolly (she thought) at this. She had said down again, at the insistence of her hostess, Mrs. Hart was lounging gracefully in a deep chair and the young man had eased his tall self into another.
"Really?" he said idly. Boots could have killed him for it. And "really!" he said again.
"Dennis," interpolated Lois Hart, facing the girl, "is just back from England. On his way to California. He," said Lois impressively, "writes."
"Oh!" Boots forgot momentarily her distrust of the stranger, her uneasiness. "Do you, really?"
The young man waved his achievements aside airily. He was very good looking. Boots thought, if you admired that rather supercilious type. He had long, narrow, gentleman blue eyes, put in with a smutty finger. His eyelashes were ridiculously long. They fascinated one.
Just the same, she didn't like him. She resented him. Maybe it was partly because tonight she was feeling lost and hurt and out of things; at any rate, after a few minutes of this wandering, desultory conversation she said she must go. She hadn't left a note for the parents. They would be at home any minute—they would wonder.
Lois, who knew how the casual comings and goings of Larchmont's younger set were managed, rather opened her eyes at this, but she did not protest. Dennis would walk down with Boots, she said.
"No, oh no! I'll just slip through the hedge," Boots Raeburn, noted in Larchmont for her "smooth line," her ease and poise, was actually stammering and flushing.
Somehow she managed to get away. Her cheeks were very hot. He might have insisted on accompanying her, she thought resentfully. He might have—
The house was still dark and silent when she let herself into it. She switched on a lamp in the sitting room and went up stairs to her room. It was a big, wide apartment, shabby and comfortable. She stretched out on the hot, white sand and lay there in that blissful state of suspension which is half-waking and half-asleep.

For the thousandth time Boots thought enviously of the rooms of the "other girls," Isabel, with her pegged maple and candlewick spread and the big satin puff, hand quilted. And Sylvia Rivers whose sitting room had been "done" by a famous decorator from the city, all in pastels with modernistic furniture. No, it wasn't fair. Life itself was not fair.

She ran water into the tub in the big, staring white bathroom. She scrubbed her teeth meticulously, and stared discontentedly at her unflawed skin in the mirror. What good was it, she demanded passionately of herself, what earthly good was it to be pretty and graceful and well behaved? It got you precisely nothing. . . . Old Mrs. Waterman had undoubtedly asked her, at the last minute, to "fill in."

Mrs. Waterman's table would be full of stodgy old people and across the room, accompanied by shrieks of laughter, would be Sylvia's group. Hardly among the rest. . . . She flung back her golden mane like a wild, young, resentful mare. . . . No good thinking of all this now. She would go, wear her plaid organdie, her old slippers. . . . do the best she could.

She was asleep when the parents came in, 10 minutes later, one arm flung across her face, sleeping the untroubled sleep of childhood. . . .

ANOTHER bright, hot, breathless day dawned. Boots woke to a feeling of gaiety and hopefulness. Anything might happen. . . . it was sure to be a splendid party. . . . what an idiot she had been to grouch about things yesterday. Everything went more smoothly on this hot morning. At 11 Mrs. Raeburn, bound for the stores, dropped Boots at the clubhouse gate. Shouts and splashing were heard above the sound of a player piano. Boots sprang lightly up the stairs.

It was too early for "the crowd," although the girl saw one or two familiar faces and waved gaily to a few of the high school set who already seemed "just kids" to her. Nothing could bother her, nothing upset her, she told herself gaily. Today was wonderful. There was a special feeling in the air of hope and promise. The dance tonight would be wonderful, too. What matter if she were to be among the oldest? Boots would see her. He might even single her out. . . . She dove and swam in solitary happiness. Afterward she stretched out on the hot white sand and lay there in that blissful state of suspension which is half waking and half asleep, thinking her own thoughts.

She must have actually fallen asleep, although she hadn't intended to do so, because the sun was blazing down in the intense heat of midday when she heard her name.

She came out of a dim, foggy dream, unstartling. "My dear, we had a good laugh out of it. Mrs. Waterman called Mother and said who could she get at the last minute. Mother said, of course all the crowd was spoken for. Then Mrs. W. brooded for a bit and said she'd try the Raeburn girl. She didn't think she had much fun and they were such fine people—all that rot. And, my dear, if she isn't going!"

Boots lay still as a statue, her heart hammering, hammering in her breast. She felt a little sick. She did not stir.

There was a general burst of laughter and the gay, inconsequent voice went on, Patty's voice. "It will be a riot. I can just see Sylvia's face when she sees her with the graybeards!"

"Well, I think it's a shame. I think Boots is pretty awful," said Isabel loyally. "Just because they've lost all their money and she can't keep up with the crowd."

If she hadn't been so desperately sick, if her head hadn't been whirling and her heart pounding like a wild thing Boots would have blessed her for this. Instead she lay there, transfixed, unable to move hand or foot.

When one is thinking thoughts which terrify, puzzling over things that no one knows, wondering how the scheme of living goes, trusting unpleasantness may pass him by—these shadows swiftly from the sky. And rest your eye where soft green pastures grow. Or watch a tug that brilliant barges tow. Flowing along where soaring sea-gulls cry. Yet, when distracted by that emptiness which to the best of us at times must come—Glimpses of nature that must please you some. And dwell on these when you feel great distress. Let all those inner promptings be the sum Of better thoughts 'till self lives less and less. . . . Selected.

Weekly Sunday School Lesson

Weekly Sunday School Lesson
Text: Amos 5:1, 10-15, 21-24
The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for August 12.

By WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
Editor of Advance

A great figure in history is the prophet Amos. He was a man of his age, but he reappears typically in every age, or, if not, a society where social injustice is rampant suffers through the lack of a great spokesman for the needy and the oppressed.

Amos was a farmer or a herdsmen. He had the clarity of vision of a man living his life in the open, working with the forces of nature and dependent upon the providence of God. Such a man develops strength and courage. He learns, also, some lessons of elemental honesty. He knows that if he would attain certain results he must work with the sources and powers that God has established.

He learns, also, the lessons of courage and sacrifice because the way of attainment is not always easy. He learns to bear losses as well as gains. It was a man of this sort, clear of vision, with a sense of right, with a true standard of values, with an understanding of the true economies of life, who came out from his herds and his fields to survey the society of his time.

Think of such a man coming into one of our modern cities. Imagine how he would be affected coming from his clean, pure atmosphere with the foul air of the slums.

Think of the effect upon him of the contrast of the great and beautiful buildings with the tumble-down tenements and rickety dwelling places, not homes, where masses of the people live unwholesomely.

Think of the effect upon him of the debased and debauched life that he observes as people go about their false pleasures. And imagine, also, the reaction of his mind and conscience as he observes beneath all this the dishonesty and corruption of those who are set to govern city and country and on the part of leaders in the business and financial world.

Imagine Amos, for instance, coming into our modern life here in America during recent years when we have been discovering how hollow and unsound was much of our so-called prosperity!

It is in these terms that we must picture Amos if we would understand him in his own age. He lived in an age and society which, allowing for external differences, were very much like our own have been.

The age was one of seeming prosperity, when wealth was flaunting itself, when the buildings of heavy stone were in contrast to the trading down of the poor and the burdens of the people. Along with all this there was the perversion of religion itself.

It was a matter of feast days and of much outward observance in worship, with very little regard for the realities of life and of justice. Even music and melody had enriched the worship, but upon the ears of Amos there was a jarring note of selfishness and greed and injustice.

Amos saw the hollowness and injustice of it all, and he called upon men to turn from all this hypocrisy to judgment and truth. His words ring with reality for our time and for every time.

"Let judgment run down as waters and righteousness as a mighty stream." Bulls are colorblind and can not be angered by the sight of red.

Family on Trial for Girl's Death

5 Accused of Murder of Foster-Child in North Carolina

WILKESBORO, N. C. (AP)—The state began presenting to a jury of middle-aged farmers Thursday its version of the mountain drama which culminated in the strange death of Leola Childers, 18, for which five members of her family are on trial for their lives.

After the jury had been selected, opposing lawyers spent almost the entire session examining and cross-examining Nathan Tharpe, farmer-neighbor of the defendants, who was one of the first persons on the scene after the crime.

The state charges that Luther Tilley, 32, fired the rifle shot that killed his foster sister and that all five members of the family were engaged in a conspiracy to kill the girl.

Tharpe testified that as he came to the Tilley home December 30, 1933, a few minutes before he and other neighbors found the dead girl in the house, he saw Luther running out of the house with a shotgun in his hands.

Tharpe told the jury he rushed to the Tilley home after he answered a party telephone line ring and heard a voice cry:

"There are some men here—three white men and a negro—robbing the place. They're about to kill me."

Tharpe said that as he entered the room where the girl's body lay, a rifle was against the door, which would not remain closed without a prop against it.

Kelly Brown, 23, another neighbor of the Tilleys, corroborated most of Tharpe's testimony.

The defense indicated it would contend that the girl killed herself. The prosecution announced it would contend that the girl was slain to keep her from implicating Luther Tilley in the death of Andrew Eldridge, slain in an alleged bootleggers' feud seven

Says Russia Broke Propaganda Pledge

Evidence which he said purported to prove violation of Russia's anti-propaganda agreement with the United States was offered by Archibald E. Stevens, secretary of the National Civic Federation, when, as shown here, he appeared in New York before the Congressional Committee investigating "un-American activities."

Other defendants are Warwick W. Tilley, 60, patriarch of the family; his wife, who is 58; another son, Clyde, 18; and Luther Tilley's 30-year-old wife. The elder Tilleys were in Elkin at the time.

Allege Long Got Insurance Funds

U. S. Investigating Crash of Union Indemnity Company

NEW ORLEANS, La. (AP)—For two hours Wednesday Mike Moss, once a powerful figure in the banking and political life in New Orleans, sat before a federal grand jury and told what he knew about income taxes filed by Huey Long and his political associates during Long's administration as governor. After his testimony the grand jury recessed and not a person connected with the investigation would say a word. Moss left the federal building under guard of a federal agent.

For months a squad of Treasury department agents have been investigating income tax returns of Long and a dozen of his political associates. Their efforts were spurred when Mike Moss who retreated to his ranch in Arizona when his Union Indemnity Company crashed and carried down several other institutions, gave an affidavit to the federal agents telling of various transactions that passed through his banking and insurance house.

Immediately he was placed under a federal grand jury subpoena and a federal bodyguard provided him on the ranch. He was brought from Arizona to New Orleans by the agent and escorted before the grand jury to testify.

The investigating agents, in command of the agent who prepared the evidence that sent Al Capone to the penitentiary for failure to pay federal income taxes, will not discuss the case. It is known however, that they have questioned more than a dozen of Long's political captains in an effort to determine if they and Long had made proper returns to the government.

Before Moss' financial enterprises struck the rocks, he was a close business and personal friend of Seymour Weiss, Long's political treasurer. During the United States Senate's committee's investigation of Senator John H. Overton, a Long associate, Julian Long, Huey's brother, said he had seen Moss hand Long large packets of money which Long would shove into his pockets.

GLORIFYING YOURSELF

A New Coiffure May Change Or Emphasize Your Type

Did you ever notice how an actor or an actress will get almost the entire key for a character part by means of a wig that somehow denotes the kind of person that is to be played? The fact that a wig can work such miracles gives an indication of the change a new hairdress can make in your own appearance. I have seen women change their types entirely by altering their coiffures, becoming vivid and provocative where before they had been dull and everydayish.

As a matter of fact, something very much like that happened to the popular brown-eyed, red-haired Janet Gaynor of film fame. Miss Gaynor always was a pretty little girl, but when she used to wear her curly hair long, screwed up in a bun at the back, halfway parted on the side, and rather undisciplined and undistinctive, she might have been any one of fifty other pretty little girls.

It was only after she cut her hair, slicked down the front a bit, made the part more decisive to emphasize her round face with the dimple in the chin, and wore the curls long on her neck, that girls all over the country began to copy her.

Incidentally, plucking her rather heavy eye-brows improved Janet's appearance, too, and a judicious use of mascara on the lashes aided in creating that clear, candid gaze that has become so famous.

Distilleries Urge Aid for Dry Areas

With Big Supply, Incentive Lost to Repeal State Laws

WASHINGTON (AP)—The country's distilleries have asked the Treasury for a stricter law enforcement which probably would decrease their own sales. An appeal for special efforts to curb the shipments of tax-paid liquor into dry states, has been made, officials said Wednesday, to the alcoholic tax unit of Secretary Morgenthau's department.

As a result, inquiries are being made into a number of cases where wholesalers in wet states joining dry territory are receiving shipments regarded as in excess of the requirements of their own legitimate business.

Dr. James M. Moran, supervisor of the Distillers Code Authority, said the groups he represents were actively co-operating with the Treasury in exposing indirect movement of tax-paid liquor into dry territory.

Privately some officials said the distillers are concerned over the possible effects the flow of liquor into prohibition areas might have on the incentive in those states to support wet legislation. With a plentiful supply of tax-paid liquor on hand, drinkers might not be interested in attempts to repeal prohibition statutes.

Minister Indicted in Deacon's Death

Alabama Murder Follows Prolonged Church Quarrel

MOULTON, Ala. (AP)—A Baptist minister Wednesday was indicted as the ambush slayer of an elderly deacon of his church.

Arraignment of the minister, the Rev. L. P. Royer, 55, on charges of first degree murder of Frank Pickens, 81, was set for Thursday.

The minister and his son, William, 14, have been held in jail without bond since their arrest. Under Alabama law, the boy, because of his age, cannot be tried in circuit court, however, until he has been given a hearing before the juvenile court judge.

Royer and his son have repeatedly denied any connection with the slaying, which the state alleges was the result of an effort to oust the pastor from his pulpit in the Moulton Baptist church.

"I'm not surprised," said Royer, as he was arrested in the basement of his church, where he sat reading the Bible. "They have accused me of ev-

1,000 Guns Stolen From State Guard

Underworld Supplying Itself From National Guard Armories

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—The underworld has stolen 1,027 guns—10 of them machine guns—and 23,110 rounds of ammunition from National Guard armories in 29 states since January 1, 1932, William Stanley, acting attorney general, said Thursday.

He revealed also that the Department of Justice has asked the War Department to prevail upon state governments to end these thefts.

Stanley reminded that the federal machine gun law which takes effect Friday is intended to close firearms channels to the criminal.

"The underworld will have to get guns in order to operate," he said, adding that for that reason the Justice Department was particularly anxious to end the raids on guard equipment—loaned by the War Department.

The law which goes into effect Friday imposes federal license taxes on concerns engaged in the manufacture and sale of sawed-off shotguns and Chosen to Head Doctors of U. S.

Dr. Walter Biering of Des Moines here greets the world with a broad smile, as he just has received one of the highest honors of the medical profession—the presidency of the American Medical Association. The Iowa physician was inaugurated at the annual convention in Cleveland, succeeding Dr. Dean Lewis, Baltimore.

The Department of Justice negotiated an unofficial agreement with machine gun manufacturers whereby they inform the president of proposed purposes of such weapons. The notice is turned over to the department for investigation. If the department approves the sales they are consummated.

Figures made public by Stanley showed that of the stolen guns, 49 were automatic rifles, 28 were other high-powered rifles and 940 were pistols. Two hundred and thirty of the stolen weapons and 1,250 rounds of ammunition have been recovered but no machine guns.

Texas had 263 guns taken in nine robberies. Missouri was second with 106 guns stolen in five thefts. Other robberies included: Oklahoma, 56 guns in five robberies; Georgia, 86 in four; North Carolina, 41 in four; Kansas, 90 in three; Iowa, 36 in three; Arkansas, 14 in three; Pennsylvania, Tennessee and Indiana, three robberies; Illinois, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Arizona and Minnesota, two robberies each.

One Pickling Receipt Serves for All Fruits and Vegetables

Slight Changes in the Preparation Give Basic Syrup Wide Changes

BY MARY E. DAGUE
NEA Staff Service Writer

Nearly all fruits and many vegetables, especially carrots and cucumbers lend themselves to this method of pickling. Carrots retain their color, are decorative to serve and are easier to make than cucumber rings on account of their natural firmness. Unless cucumbers are at the right stage they become soft and mushy. Beets, small green tomatoes and ripe yellow tomattees may also be used to make appetizing and colorful pickles which will serve as garnishes for winter salads and meat dishes.

Canned or dried fruit as well as fresh may be used for pickles. And melon rinds, both cantaloupe and watermelon should be added to the list.

Cook Pineapple First

For pineapple pickles pare and slice the fruit and cook until tender. Then cut the slices in wedges and our boiling vinegar syrup over the fruit for three successive mornings. The fourth morning fruit and syrup are brought to the boiling point, put into sterilized jars and sealed.

Plums, pears, peaches and apples and seedless grapes are all good put up in a wet pickling syrup. However the fruit that is pickled without removing the skin or rind should be well pierced over the entire surface. The fruit may be cooked until tender in clear water and simmered in a pickling syrup until transparent. Or the whole pickling process may be done in the syrup. The pickled material should be tender and clear, but firm and unbroken when put in cans. Pouring the syrup over the fruit or vegetables for several mornings in succession insures a perfect and unbroken pickle but prolong the time of preparation.

The same general rule may be used for almost any variety of fruit or vegetable. The proportions of sugar and vinegar remain the same. The spices are used whole and tied in a small cheesecloth bag. Powdered spices color and darken the fruit.

Sweet Pickling Syrup

One quart vinegar 4 pounds light brown sugar, 1-2 cup of whole spices. Calculate 1-2 cup vinegar to 1-2 pound sugar for one pound of fruit.

Grant Might Have Been Better Selection

Shields and Lester Stoecken are too hopelessly handicapped. They can't beat Perry and Bunny Austins on sheer fight alone.

While I dislike to second guess anybody, we Bryan Grant probably would have been a better selection than Shields.

It might be well for the American Davis Cup committee to take into consideration how a player's game fits that of the British stars.

For example, Shields likely would blast Grant off the court in an elimination, yet the Atlanta player's game is much more adapted to that of Austin, the stylist, than that of the tow-

NEW YORK.—Unless Fred Perry turns professional, the Davis Cup is quite likely to remain in England long enough to round out a ten-year stay on the other side.

A seventh American expedition failed, with Sidney B. Wood and Frank Shields unable to score in even one singles scrap.

And when the time comes for the British to pass the trophy along, Germany, and not the United States, may be the recipient.

Indeed, the Teutons, who have made rapid stride in tennis, might have been the challengers this year had not Nazi trouble cost them the services of Daniel Prenn, almost as good as the 21-year-old Baron Gottfried von Cramm, whom William T. Tilden rates next to Perry among the amateurs.

In taking two sets before wrenching his side, Wood demonstrated that he had it in him to repel Perry. With a better break in the luck, the once precocious darling of the Seabright courts may click in 1935, but the other singles player must be developed. He may eventually be found among Gene Mako of Los Angeles, the intercollegiate champion; E. Ramey Donovan, a contribution from Fordham; or Frankie Parker, the 18-year-old Lawrenceville student, although to date this season the latter has failed to reveal the form that earned him No. 8 ranking.

ering chap who carried the Yankee standards.

Since the Europeans learned the art of taking a terrific service, their conquerors have had to have flawless command of the ball. Shields can't beat their best wild rushes to the net. Shields is mechanical—stilted and cramped. He is a one or two stroke player, with a weak backhand and faultily ground strokes.

Perry Clicked When He Quit Clowning

Grant, on the other hand, has an all-court game. Against Austin, the man the Americans stood the best chance of defeating, Bisty could have been relied upon to stick in there, and get the ball back. And that is what it takes to trim Austin, who is none too strong and who fades as a stiff battle rolls on. Shields defeated him by carrying him to a fifth set in the Wimbledon tournament.

His victories over Jack Crawford plainly gave Perry the impetus required to make him the world's foremost amateur. At the outset this kangaroo-like athlete was a bit of a buffon. For some time before he struck his true stride, it was said that he practically would be invincible if he would get his mind on his game. He seemed to suffer from an inferiority complex.

I doubt that Perry could turn back Tilden, Johnston, Cochet or LaCoste at their peak.

But Great Britain and amateur tennis need not apologize for their top-ranking player. He has remarkable speed, a fine variety of strokes, and is capable in every square inch of the court.

Six 5-Day Weeks for Duck Season

Shooting to Be Barred on Sunday and Monday, Nov. 6-Dec. 15

The Arkansas Game and Fish Commission, meeting at the Hotel Ben McGehee Saturday night voted to recommend to the United States Biological Survey that the Arkansas duck season for 1934 consist of six five-day weeks, beginning November 16, and closing January 15.

The Department of Agriculture recently decided that duck shooting should be limited to 30 days this year, as was done two years ago. States were permitted some leeway in the arrangement of the 30 days.

Guy Amsler, secretary of the commission, said that the Biological Survey would receive recommendations of the southern states and try to a more or less uniform season throughout the south. Hence the decision of the Arkansas commission may be changed by federal authorities.

However, Mr. Amsler said he believed the actions of the late commission may remain unchanged. Tennessee has approved 10 three-day hunting weeks, he said.

The ferris wheel was named after its inventor, George W. G. Ferris, an American engineer and steel bridge builder, who was born in Galesburg, Ill., in 1859.
